The Role of School Nurses in Advancing the Health of Students

School nurses are well-positioned to address the unique health needs of school-aged children and adolescents. They provide a continuum of care, from prevention and early intervention to acute care and chronic disease management. School nurses also work with students, families, and school staff to create a healthy school environment that supports student learning and success. Specifically, school nurses play a key role in:

- Providing direct health services to students, including health screenings, immunizations, first aid, and health education
- Working with school staff to create a healthy school environment that supports student learning and success
- Promoting health and wellness among students, families, and the school community
- Advocating for policies and programs that support the health of school-aged children and adolescents
